

TEACHING WORLD STUDIES: An introduction to global perspectives in the curriculum

David Hicks & Charles Townley (eds)
Longman, 1982

World studies is a dimension in the curriculum and a field of growing concern in education, particularly with the recent Schools Council project World Studies 8-13. This important new book covers the introduction of global perspectives into secondary teaching and higher education and is intended as a resource volume for teachers and teacher educators, on the philosophy, problems and methods of global approaches to education. This book will be essential reading for a wide range of educationists: students, teachers and teacher educators, as well as advisers and administrators who are concerned with the inter-related fields of world studies, multicultural education, education for peace, development education and education for international understanding.

The strengths of this book lie in the detail of its explanation of a “hard-to-grasp” area and in the wealth of practical references. The contributors seem determined that world studies will not limp along as a soft option – Times Educational Supplement

1. The need for global literacy – David Hicks & Charles Townley
2. Culture and justice: key concepts in world studies and multicultural education - Robin Richardson
3. ‘So truth be in the field...?’ Approaches to controversy in world studies teaching – David Bridges
4. World studies and the core curriculum – David Selby
5. World studies and the development of new resources – Hugh Starkey
6. The Jordanhill Project in international understanding – Jim Dunlop
7. West African study cruises – Barry Dufour
8. Global issues in initial teacher education: an overview – David Hicks
9. The third world: a geographical interpretation – Bill Kelly & Tony Ghaye
10. At the quick of change: an RE-ME centre – Brian Gates
11. African Studies: issues of course development – Roger Morgan
12. Resources for developing a global perspective – Charles Townley